Reducing the “Fear Factors” of Dentistry

We know that some patients get more nervous than others at the mere sight of a needle and syringe. That is why the Wand has been a part of our practice for more than fifteen years. It's one of those ingenious gadgets you buy that is so effective that it quickly becomes an integral part of your practice (instead of collecting dust on a shelf). The Wand is a computer-controlled local anesthetic delivery system.

The computer provides a flow of anesthetic directly ahead of the needle. This numbs the site of insertion and develops a “pathway of anesthesia” so patients hardly feel the needle at all. The source of discomfort for most injections, however, isn't the needle; it's the flow of the anesthetic into the tissue. The Wand delivers the anesthetic into the tissue. The Wand delivers the anesthetic at an optimal flow rate for a comfortable injection almost every

Our Commitment

When you refer your patients to a specialist, you have the right to insist that they receive the best care possible.

That's why, at Endodontic Associates, we place so much importance on state-of-the-art technology and improved surgical techniques. For years, dental professionals have entrusted us to provide their patients with the highest quality, most comprehensive endodontic treatment possible, and we appreciate your confidence in our skills.

The Wand system is just one of many advances in our offices you and your patients will appreciate. We are committed to doing everything possible to make endodontic treatment as pleasant as possible.

time. In addition, certain injections made possible with the Wand minimize the unnecessary numbness of the tongue, cheek, and face.

The Wand is esthetically appealing to the eye...it is a small lightweight hand-piece that resembles a pen. Patients are not as intimidated by it as they are by a conventional syringe. Most patients are also impressed that a computer is giving them an injection.

Being able to provide pain-free injections is important for any dentist trying to build a practice. The Wand is definitely an effective device for making the injection easier for you and your patients ■
